3. One artillery regiment of the East China Military Area (ECMA) Artillery Command was dispersed at Liukungtao (122-10, 37-30), Yungch'eng (榮成), Haiyang (121-14, 36-43), and Tsingtao.
4. ECMA Armored Force Command had stationed one regiment at Hsuehou and one of its battalions at Tsinan.
5. The East China Navy had stationed two marine regiments along the Shantung coast, one regiment being centered at Weihaiwei and the other at Tsingtao.
6. From August to November the Chinese Communist Navy did not station any naval vessels permanently at Tsingtao, Weihaiwei, Chefoo, or P'englai (120-45, 37-49). Although two or three small gunboats appeared occasionally at these ports for supplies and fuel, they did not remain for more than a few days at a time.
7. Air Force training organizations were at Tsingtao and Hsuehou. An unknown number of paratroops were at Hsuehou.

[] Comment. [] five
Shantung garrison brigades had been reorganized into the 97 through 101 Divisions and gave their dispositions as of early November. Only the disposition of the 97 Division was similar to the above report.

1. [] Comment. Although Hsuehou was formerly a part of Kiangsu, it has now been incorporated into Shantung.

2. [] Comment. The organization of the Shantung Military District is not entirely regular; under it are three military districts, similar to areas controlled by regional branches of the provincial government. Military sub-districts have then been established under these three military districts. Therefore, military sub-districts in Shantung are not directly under the command of the provincial military district.
